

Poets With Parkinson's

GDPR privacy policy

Purpose of policy

Poets with Parkinson's is a group of private persons creating a safe space for those that write poetry and wish to share and develop their craft. The purpose of this policy is to keep us in line with international GDPR law and assure you of our commitment to keep your information private.

What data we request

We request an e-mail only for access purposes to our website. You may also submit your name as a member, but this is up to you. E-mail addresses will be stored by the data controller (Martin Pickard) and not shared with anyone outside of Poets with Parkinson's. Email addresses will be removed on request or when a member leaves the group. No information regarding members will be stored after they have left.

How we use data

We only use your email address to allow you access to the site and for communication purposes. No email address will be shared to anyone outside of Poets with Parkinson's without your consent. Names are submitted by members and second names are not required, By requesting membership to Poets for Parkinson's you consent to giving us your email address and allowing us to communicate with you via it.

How we disclose data

No other parties will have access to any personal data we collect.

The data subject's rights

GDPR provides you with several rights (including the right to access, the right to be forgotten and the right to object). You can request information on what data we hold about you, request to be forgotten or object by sending an e-mail to team@poetswithparkinsons.com. You can also make complaints via this same email address

Changes of privacy policy

We have a right to modify this policy as needed and will notify data subjects about any changes via the website.
